	ADD: Section I – Special Olympics Divisioning. 6 Proxy events are used in some cases to division for multiple events at a competition by either using one preliminary event or one designated final event. For example, in the case of alpine skiing, a Giant Slalom proxy event may be used to division for the finals for the Slalom, Giant Slalom, and Super Giant Slalom races. In the case that a proxy event is used for divisioning, an athlete's performance in any of the final races may be used to division for subsequent finals at that competition. For example, if a Giant Slalom proxy event is used to division for three events (Giant Slalom, Slalom and Super Giant Slalom), and, after the first event has been run (Giant Slalom), it becomes clear based on performance that an athlete needs to be moved to a higher or lower division, competition management may re-division the athlete for the finals of the Slalom and Super Giant Slalom.
