Together We Can!

Let me win.

but if I cannot win,

let me be brave in the attempt.

-Special Olympics Athlete Oath-

Welcome to the world's most inspiring humanitarian event - Special Olympics World Winter Games 2013 - held in Pyeongchang and Gangneung.

The Special Olympics World Winter Games PyeongChang 2013, is a sports festival for people with intellectual disabilities from around the world. It will be a demonstration of courage, spirit and passion.

The Organizing Committee and I have prepared this event with joy and families and friends will be greeted by an inclusive and welcoming spirit that will be seen on the ice of Gangneung and the snow of PyeongChang.

We worked hard carefully planning every detail so that all athletes and visitors to PyeongChang will comfortably enjoy their visit. Those who experience this incredible event will be inspired and touched by the stories and experiences, share a cultural experience where more than 110 countries will be represented, and will witness and experience world class sports.

Your support and participation in this event demonstrates to the world, that every person deserves the chance to reach their full potential and that all people should be defined by their abilities not disabilities.

To Special Olympics athletes participating - We are excited to see you compete and show the world your abilities in PyeongChang and Gangneung. It is my hope you take this experience and fond memories back with you to your home country.

While we are all different, we are united on this multi-colored path paved by the unity, friendship, sport, hope and inspiration of Special Olympics.

Dear Fans of Special Olympics:

It is with gratitude and joy that over 4 million athletes of the Special Olympics movement join me in welcoming you to Special Olympics World Winter Games PyeongChang 2013, and to the Republic of Korea. To those athletes who came to compete in Korea it will be an experience of a lifetime, but for every Special Olympics athlete around the world, the Games are a beacon of hope and the carrier of their aspirations to Olympic greatness. The world of Special Olympics joins me in thanking everyone – every volunteer, every sponsor, every staff member, and every person of good will – who has made these Games a reality.

As you join the hundreds of Special Olympics competitions and events, I hope you will find moments that surprise you, that amaze you, and most importantly, change you. Today, more than 2,300 athletes and 10,000 fans from more than 110 nations are gathered here to unite together and celebrate the power of the human spirit. At these World Games you will experience joy, triumph, victory, and achievement. You will witness perseverance, hard work, grit, and sacrifice. Together, we can show the world that through sports we create communities of acceptance and dignity for all.

All of us are so proud to be in Korea and in PyeongChang, a city of world class sporting venues and compassionate traditions, and I hope and trust that when these Games are over the competition, the health promotion, the youth engagement, the family empowerment – that all of these will combine to make these days historic moments in Korea's proud history. A few short years ago, this country looked to the world for support in its own development. Today the world looks to the republic of Korea for an example of a brave and courageous country as committed to excellence as it is to unity.

May the spirit of the Special Olympics World Winter Games PyeongChang 2013 and the Republic of Korea long live in the hearts of millions the world over. "Together We Can!" Best wishes,

Chairman and CEO of Special Olympics Timothy P. Shriver, Ph.D.

To all those taking part in one of the most special meetings to the world,

I would like to greet all of you attending the the 2013 Special Olympics World Winter Games in PyeongChang, Korea, along with all the residents in the city.

We enthusiastically welcome the world athletes and their families visiting Pyeongchang, Gangwon-do, the center of winter sports and the future city of 2018 Winter Olympics.

I wish to deliver the appreciation and respect of the residents of Gangwon-do to Commissioner Na Gyeongwon and all those who made more efforts than anyone to make this event into a great festival of communication and harmonization with citizens around the world,

To the volunteers who pour all their effort day and night, and to all VIPs from in and out of Korea, participating here today with one mind and spirit.

A roar grandly shouted toward the world and humanity! Together we can!

Your courage and will to continuously make efforts without losing spirit even against the odds, and your dedication and endless love of your family, who are always by your side, have become the great power making this day.

The 10th Anniversary of Special Olympics World Winter Games, promises to be a venue of communication and a time of deep inspiration and reflection on the valuable and priceless meaning of victory, more than just breaking records or athletic performance, while overcoming differences of nationality, ethnicity, ideology and celebrating different abilities.

While hoping that the excitement from the warm support provided by the citizens will entirely fill each stadium, I also hope that this passion and one spirit will set an example to all, even as we look also ahead to hosting the 2018 Winter Olympics.

Please remember the valuable efforts and moments of victory achieved in Pyeongchang forever in your memories. We will become your reliable companion.

"Happy new year!" We love you all, and respect you all.

Thank you.

Governor of Gangwon-do, Choi Moon Soon
